

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An optical communication system includes a master unit, one or more beam-deflectors, and one or more client units, interconnected by free-space beam path. Methods are described for automatically aligning the various components of the optical circuit, without human intervention or assistance, and without advance knowledge of the location of individual components in space.